

War Eagle!

Now that you are here at Auburn, what's your next step? Deciding where and when to study abroad, truly one of the best things you can do to enhance your education and your life. In this handbook designed for you, you will find lots of information on what to do, and we also have twice-weekly orientation sessions in 234 Biggin Hall (Thursdays at 3:00 PM – Fridays at 11:00 AM) to help you get going.

Some reasons for studying abroad include.....

- Learn a new language or hone an established one.
- Meet new friends.
- Build your resume.
- See the world and broaden your experience.
- Learn to navigate and communicate in a foreign environment.
- Explore your heritage.
- Fight stereotypes by educating others and dispel your own in the process.
- Improve your professional and financial potential.
- In a global world, it is important that you enhance your academic program and thus broaden your international perspective.
- Once you have survived and conquered a foreign culture, excelling in the domestic job market will be a breeze.

Dispersed throughout, you will find Global Tiger Tales, written by Auburn students who all had a new world open up to them through their study abroad experiences. Your story can be next! Where will it take you?

Nathan McCollum, (to right center of photo) studied in South Africa during summer 2004. He explained that covering the rhino's eyes made him docile! Along with vets, he helped move endangered animals, including two rhinos.
