Criteria for non-credit instruction

Auburn University adheres to the guidelines for noncredit continuing education programming set forth by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and the International Association for Continuing Education and Training (IACET). These mandate that institutions follow a systematic approach for planning non-credit instruction and assessing against stated objectives. The criteria address comprehensively elements of program organization, learning event development and evaluation.

SACS and IACET criteria require organizations to establish clear lines of responsibility in order to maintain control of the development and administration of the program. Organizations are required to establish evaluation and assessment processes, and provide an appropriate learning environment and support services. The criteria require organizations to establish intended learning outcomes (e.g., behavioral or performance objectives) for each continuing education and training event, and to determine procedures to assess achievement of the learning outcomes. The Office of Outreach Information and Program Certification can provide advice on interpretation and application of these non-credit program criteria; call OIPC at 844-4730.

FACT at a glance:

The CEU and administrative criteria were created by a National Task Force on Continuing Education in 1968. The criteria are revised periodically to ensure proper applicability to new forms of non-credit instruction.
