Auburn University Forest Health Cooperative

The Forest Health Cooperative will address important, current and pertinent forest health issues in a way that addresses real world management problems in the southeastern United States, beginning with pine decline. Membership is open region-wide to landowners, consultants, industry, federal and state forestry associations and non-governmental organizations interested in maintaining forest health, productivity and sustainability. Membership is offered at three levels: Full, Associate, and Sustaining. Sustaining Members will receive an annual Newsletter and access to the FHC Web page. Associate Members will receive the benefits of the Sustaining Members as well as annual Research Reports and may attend the Annual Advisory Meeting but cannot serve on the Advisory Council. Full members will receive all the benefits of Associate and Sustaining Members and be able to serve on the Advisory Council and have full voting powers with respect to the research program and budgetary decisions.
