

We proudly celebrate the 13th year of successful publications of our journal

Contents

1. Generalized kinetics of laser-induced fluorescence versus standard approach 45-50
V. A. Astapenko and E. S. Khramov
2. Explaining of the Proton Radius Puzzle by Using the Second Flavor of Muonic Hydrogen Atoms 51-55
Eugene Oks
3. Computation of Selected Optical Transitions of Diatomic Molecules: AlO, C₂, CN, 57-69
OH, N₂, NO, and TiO
Christian G. Parigger
4. Lithium Atoms or Lithium-like Ions in a High-Frequency Laser Field: Circular Rydberg States 71-77
N. Kryukov and E. Oks
5. Cavity Ring-Down Spectroscopy of CH in a Microwave Plasma Discharge 79-86
Laszlo Nemes and Christian G. Parigger
6. Are Hydrogen Column Densities in Galactic Dark Matter Halos Overestimated? 87-92
E. Oks

Call for Papers

The IRAMP is a peer reviewed international journal, created at the beginning of 2010, that publishes high-quality review articles and also high-quality original research papers. Topics of interest are all areas of Atomic, Molecular, and Optical (AMO) physics in the broadest sense. They include not only fundamental fields of AMO physics, but also applied areas, such as, for example (but not limited to):

- atomic and molecular processes in plasmas and gases
- optical and beam-probe nanophysics
- plasma spectroscopy
- X-ray lasers
- astrophysical applications

A distinctive feature of IRAMP is publishing both review articles and original research papers and having a relatively large share of the review articles in the mix. The journal is published semi-annually.

The publication is free of charge. There is no page limit.

A publication in the IRAMP creates a timely record of the authors results for a broad audience around the world - without preventing the authors from submitting a modified/extended article elsewhere.

The authors learn about the acceptance of their papers within just 2 weeks from the submission.

Each paper should be submitted electronically as 2 files (of the same content) simultaneously: a pdf-file and a source-file (such as a word-file or a LaTeX-file). The e-mail address for submissions is: goks@physics.auburn.edu
